Cottage Grove, Minn (Feb. 1, 2008) — Renewal by Andersen, the start-to-finish window replacement division of Andersen Corporation, announced today it has been granted the Good Housekeeping Seal on all of its replacement windows and patio doors.

“At Renewal by Andersen, we have always built our reputation on quality products and happy customers,” said Craig Evanich, Renewal by Andersen president. “As the foremost symbol of quality assurance in America, the Good Housekeeping Seal complements our rich history of providing consumers with quality products and superior customer satisfaction.”

To earn the distinguished Seal, Renewal by Andersen[®] products underwent stringent evaluation by the Good Housekeeping Research Institute. Founded in 1906, the research Institute has reassured consumers for more than 100 years about their product purchasing decisions through education and product evaluation.

The Good Housekeeping Seal was introduced in 1909 as one of the first emblems in the U.S. to assure consumers as to the quality of a manufacturer’s product. Today, a product that has earned the Good Housekeeping Seal is backed by The Good Housekeeping Consumers’ Policy, published in every issue of the magazine. It states that if a product bearing the Seal proves to be defective within two years of purchase, Good Housekeeping will replace the product or refund the purchase price.

“Earning the Good Housekeeping Seal is a testament to our commitment to designing and manufacturing quality products for consumers in the window replacement market,” said Evanich. “Consumers who purchase Renewal by Andersen® windows can be assured that not only we stand behind our product, so does Good Housekeeping.”

In addition to earning the Good Housekeeping Seal, Renewal by Andersen replacement windows and doors have received qualification by other independent third parties including ENERGY STAR® and Green Seal.

Green Seal is a national nonprofit environmental organization that helps consumer choose environmentally responsible products. Renewal by Andersen is the only replacement window manufacturer to receive Green Seal Certification, a designation that demonstrates Renewal by Andersen’s commitment to environmentally responsible manufacturing and products.
